Adobe puts GenAl at centre of creativity, launches new AI tools

Launches Firefly at its annual MAX event in Los Angeles

ANUJ BHATIA Los Angeles, October 11

ADOBE ANNOUNCED SEV-ERAL new generative AI enhancements across its core product lines on Tuesday, as Big Tech races to make the most of the buzzy artificial intelligence capable of creating its content, such as text or images. The software giant launched three new artificial intelligence models as part of Firefly, Adobe's generative AI imaging tool, as well as added features to Illustrator and Adobe Express, and improved capabilities. This announcement comes at the start of Adobe's annual MAX event in Los Angeles and follows other major tech giants like Google and Microsoft, as companies rush to integrate generativeAI into their mainline products."We know that generative technology is not an end but an ingredient in your creative process. It's an onramp," Adobe CEO Shantanu Narayen said during the keynote address. "We're focusing on making sure that we integrate it directly into your workflows to fuel your creativity and deliver the power and precision that you expect from us."

Photoshop's text-to-image

In a two-hour-long keynote, held in the Peacock Theater in downtown Los Angeles, California, Adobe debuted several AI models, including Firefly Image 2—the latest version of the original Firefly AI image generator that powers features like Photoshop's Generative Fill. The new model is designed to offer higher-resolution images, with the ability to show details like foliage, skin texture, hair, hands, and facial features when rendering photorealistic humans. Adobe says Firefly Image 2 is available to try today via the web-based Firefly beta and is "coming soon" to Creative Cloud apps.Italsoannouncedtwonew Firefly models for generating vector images and design templates. Adobe claims its new Firefly Vector Model is the first generative AI for creating vector graphics via text prompts and envisions it being used for marketing and ad graphic creation, ideation, and mood boards. Adobe entered the AI race earlier this year by introducing a newfamilyofgenerativeAItools called Firefly that creates images, text effects, audio, vectors, and 3D for users. Adobe's Firefly is one of many generative artificial intelligence image tools, along with Midjourney, DALL-E, and Stable Diffusion. The company says people have generated more than 3 billion images through Adobe Firefly since it was announced earlier this year. The company behind Photoshop is taking a measured approach to rolling out AI features across its popular products and is engaging actively with the creative community through beta releases, hoping to get feedback to make future versions better. Firefly is based on the content found within Adobe's Stock library, publicly licensed content, and public domain content for which the license has lapsed. "We're committed to New Delhi, October 11 delivering the highest quality models in a thoughtful and responsible way, with transparency around the data on which they are trained and designed to be commercially safe," Narayen added.

Experts say that the AIfocused news at MAX demonstrates Adobe's strong focus on bringing generative AI into its suite of apps and services to generate media content and highlights how enterprises are experimenting with AI.

Behind hurdler's handwritten tribute to senior: 'Taught me how to clear hurdles'

NIHAL KOSHIE New Delhi, October 11

WHEN JYOTHI YARRAJI, India's bright young hurdler, stood on the podium afterwinning the silver medal at the recent Asian Games in Hangzhou, at the back of the bib, which she had unpinned and held in her hand, was a handwritten message of gratitude: "Gautham, this is for you.

We miss you". Sai Gautham, who was also a hurdler, has a special place in Jyothi's heart. He was the one who spotted her talent, helped her get admission in a sports hostel in Hyderabad, and hand-held her during her early days before she became a star. Her first pair of Nike shoes was gifted by him.

When Gautham died on August 31, four days after he met with a road accident in Kakinada, Jyothi lost her mentor and guide. "Actually, I wanted to win a gold for him at the Asian Games. But it was not to be. The message on the bib was my way of paying tribute to Gautham. I felt that I should dedicate the medal to him. He was always there for me... He was one of my seniors, he motivated me and inspired me in everything," Jyothi told The Indian Express on Wednesday. At the Asian Games earlier this month, in an evening of drama in Hangzhou, officials first disqualified Jyothi and China's Yanni Wu for a false start. But after Jyothi and the Athletics Federation of India protested, she was allowed to run in the 100 metres hurdles final, and so was Wu.

Wuwas eventually disqualified after the race, and Jyothi's bronze was upgraded to silver. China's Yuwei Lin won the gold. Jyothi was hailed for standing up for herself, putting her point across to officials without getting perturbed, and holding her nerve to win a medal. An emotional Jyothi shed tears on the podium as she gripped the bib with Gautham's name on it.

"He was the first person ever to tell me that I had talent. He happened to be in my hometown (Visakhapatnam) to visit relatives. He saw me at the ground where I was training. This was in 2015, when I had just started out. He told me that there is a SAI hostel for talented athletes, and put in a word to a coach. He was my senior at the SAI hostel. He was like a parent to me," Jyothi recalled.

She said Gautham looked out for her when she was at the hostel, motivated her, gave her training tips, advised her on her diet, and also asked her to be more social. "I was very young, I was shy and did not mingle. I didn't have any experience, I had no idea what a sports hostel was about. He explained to me how to go about things, taught me how to run, how to clear the hurdles," Jyothi said.

When Jyothi needed a new pair of shoes, Gautham bought them for her. "It was the first Nike shoes that I had ever owned. I had Nivia shoes, and that itself was a big thing for me. But when I told him I was feeling a little pain, he got mea pair of Nike shoes," she said.

Car ratings may get tied to better connectivity

A GOVERNMENT PANEL has recommended that automakers who step up connectivity features in cars to communicate with other vehicles and external systems should win better ratings on crash tests, a draft report showed, in a bid to boost road safety.

In a country with high accident rates, the advice could force automakers to equip the connected cars, as they are known, with technology using the airwaves to send warnings between drivers, and communisight scenarios," the government panel said in its 58-page draft, which is being reported for the first time by Reuters.

"Most sensors do not work well in these scenarios and V2X fills the gap," it added, referring to the connected cartechnology commonly known as vehicle-toeverything (V2X).

The panel wants V2X to be considered for inclusion in Bharat New Car Assessment Programme (NCAP) for car safety ratings, in line with developments abroad, but did not set any deadline for adoption of its Carmakers in India have begun work on advanced connectivity features in vehicles but have not firmed up a timeline, said an industry source aware of companies' discussions, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The report will now be reviewed by the communication ministry, and the road ministry, to decide on implementation. –REUTERS
